

A network management system includes a network management server and one or more clients initiating network management messages between the server and network elements. The server parses the network management messages and communicates each message to client consoles having filtering criteria satisfied by the contents of the message.